Greetings!

May 7, 2019

My name is Corey Lanier and I'm a front-end developer currently based in Toronto. I found your recent opening for a Front-end Developer, and am very interested in the role. I am excited to see the opportunity posted at LANDR; as a hobbyist musician I understand the need to make sure that talented musician has the opportunity to be heard.

As a front-end developer, I'm really comfortable with almost all of the skills you're looking for. I'm very comfortable writing JavaScript and I love React. I have experience with creating great responsive content as well as dynamic pages. I highly enjoy working with Sass to create easy to read CSS, and have shown my abilities with this and React in several of my projects, both in my bootcamp and on my own time after bootcamp. One of my favourite projects has been my NoteZ app found on my portfolio. It is a highly detailed app that challenged me to fully learn how to utilize React state, while also discovering my errors in databasing and troubleshooting on the fly.

As a recent graduate of HackerYou's web development immersive, I'm excited to bring the skills I learned in my former career as an English Language Teacher in South Korea and China to the tech industry. My strong communication, organisational, and team coordination skills will be a very strong asset to your team.

I'd love the chance to speak with you or someone on your team to see if the role might be a mutual fit. I'm incredibly eager to jump in with both feet and bring everything I can to a role like this so that I can hit the ground running. I promise you won't meet anyone more willing to work hard than me. Is there a time next week that might work for an introductory call?

Thanks for your time, and hope to hear from you soon!
